The School of Integrative Biology (SIB) at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign is searching for a Lecturer to work with a dynamic team of faculty in the Integrative Biology Honors (IBH) Program. This is a full time, non-tenure track position. Funding is available for up to three years. The Lecturer will teach in the 200-level SIB honors courses, coordinate admission to the SIB Honors program, advise the ~60 admitted students, assist students in obtaining undergraduate research experience and provide mentorship on career goals.

DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES
- Provide instruction in 200-level IB Honors courses (IB 270 “Evolution of Molecules and Cells”, and IB 271 “Organismal Biology”)
- Oversee the selection and recruitment of students for the Program
- Advise accepted students
- Mentor undergraduate research and career goals
- Maintain IBH student community relationships through social media

QUALIFICATIONS
Required:
- A PhD degree in Biology or a related field
- Knowledge of Biology, Genetics, Animal Physiology, and Evolution
- At least one year’s experience teaching an undergraduate course in molecular biology with lab (may include experience as a Teaching Assistant)

Preferred:
- Strong interpersonal and organizational skills
- Experience in developing or revising lecture and/or lab courses (e.g. syllabi, lab experiments)
- Knowledge of curriculum development, management, and pedagogy

SALARY AND APPOINTMENT INFORMATION
This is a full time, 12-month appointment, non-tenure track position, renewable for up to 3 years subject to enrollments, funding, and positive performance evaluations. The expected start date is June 1, 2018 or negotiable after closing date. Applicants may be interviewed before the closing date; however, no hiring decision will be made until after that date. Salary is commensurate with experience and qualifications.
